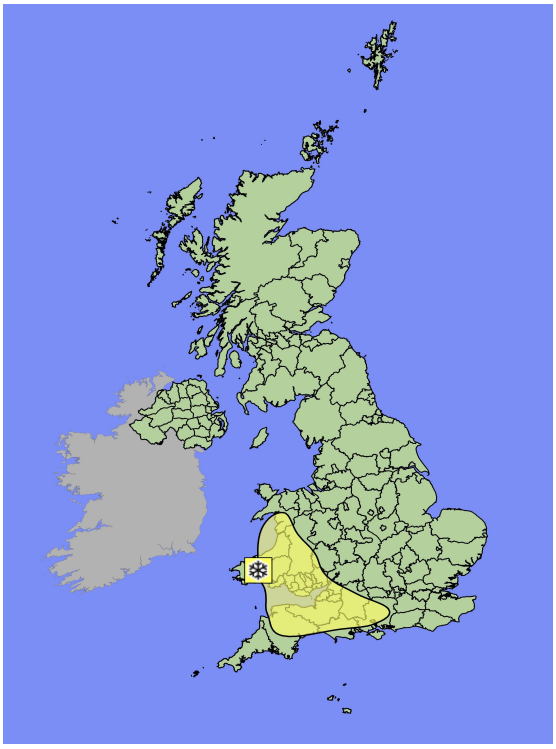
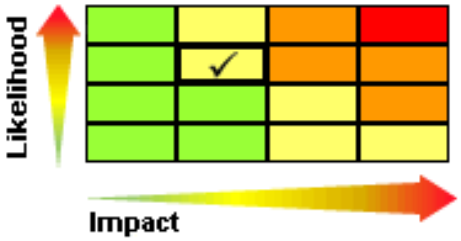
National Severe Weather Warning Service





Chief Forecasters Assessment
An old frontal system is affecting parts of southwest Britain for the rest of today. With cold air still firmly in place across the area, further sleet or snow is likely in places.

The Met Office have issued a Yellow Warning of Snow

Valid from 10:05 on Wed, 23rd Jan 2013 until 23:59 on Wed, 23rd Jan 2013

Further outbreaks of sleet or snow will affect parts of Wales and southwest England through today. A further 2-5 cm is likely in places with perhaps as much as 10 cm over high ground. The public should be aware that this may lead to localised disruption to transport.

This warning has been updated to include Hampshire and more of Wiltshire, and has been extended until midnight end of Wednesday.
